

Tourism Underwater

Demetre Modebadze

E-Mail: demetre.modebadze@tsu.ge

Department of Geography, I. Javakishvili Tbilisi State University (TSU), 3, Chavchavadze Ave., Block II, 0128, Tbilisi, Georgia

Tourism is one of the most important tool for world economic policy. It has a strong connection with cultural and social activities. Foreign policy, economic development, and sustainable development of the most urgent environment, each are directly linked to this world's and country's most important sector. The tourism sphere involving services, sales and sales is mainly focused on those people for whom wishes are the most important.

All of this gives rise to the country , which is directed towards the development of the sector to promote and develop those directions which are relevant but not actively implemented. The development of the world is going on in any direction, innovations are introduced in almost all fields, starting from computer technology, ending in the construction industry.

The demand that was current in the field of tourism yesterday may be uninteresting today. That is the reason why all are directed towards novelties and the willingness to satisfy any group of tourists with menu that is much more diversified and impressive.

Therefore, it is necessary to start developing those fields that will be demanded, and designed for the most modern and future tourist choices. This is the kind of underwater tourism that has the potential to develop our country and attract many interested extremists.